Philosophy of Leadership 5

"Whatever you are, be a good one." Abraham Lincoln

"A leader is best when people barely know he exists, when his work is done, his aim fulfilled, they will say: we did it ourselves." Lao Tzu

"A good leader inspires people to have confidence in the leader; a great leader inspires people to have confidence in themselves." Unknown

"Leadership is practiced not so much in words as in attitude and in actions." Harold S. Geneen

The idea of me being a position of leadership is a subject I have avoided as much as possible for many different reasons. The first, and foremost, is that leadership is scary. I prefer to be a behind-the-scenes person who sees my role as supporting rather than leading. I have strong opinions about the leaders I have worked with or see in public roles (i.e. presidents, members of congress, coaches, etc.). However, an armchair quarterback makes all the correct calls, the benefit of slow-motion replay, and is not dealing with the pressure of the situation. Being the person who has to make the decisions and effect change at the point of conflict requires more than I usually want to get involved with. Placing myself in the position where the buck stops is a difficult and challenging situation to be in. I also suffer from a lack of confidence which cripples many people who aspire to be leaders. All that being said, having completed three courses in Educational Leadership at Carson-Newman and interacting with current and future administrators, I find myself looking at leadership in a different light.
